Life's Arithmetic.

In a rude school house where sunbeams fall, And make quaint shadows along the wall, Sat a little boy with his brown arms bare, With tear-stained face and sunny hair, Plodding a lesson with school-boy hate, "No rest, no rest till the task is done, Two are equal to one and one."

Our school-boy now to manhood grown, Is holding a maiden's hands in his own, Adding, as on that summer's day, But adding now in a different way; "One and one are only one: One from a million will leave none." In a noisy room where laugh and call Awake strange echoes along the wall, And children shout and romp about, And turn the house all inside out, Our boy of old, with a father's smile, Holding a babe in his arms the while; Studies, still studies time's changing slate But "One and one now equal eight." In a churchyard old, where shadows fall Heavy and thick, like sombre pall, By the grass-grown graves of his lowly dead Sits a gray haired man, with bowed head An aged man of grief and care; The school-boy once, with sunny hair. "No rest, no rest, till the task is done,

A Radiant Hope.

The eight that were are now but one."

assuredly correct ground that poverty, en gate. as a rule, is disgraceful, because it is occasioned oftener by idleness than by any other cause. Of course there are very many instances of worthy poverty caused by unavoidable or unforseen misfortune, but certainly idleness and neglect of business are the chief causes. Mr. Penniman's sermons are eminently practical, appealing directly to the intelligent common sense of his hearers. While he is probably loyal to his

Here justice is in the country in the country is in the country. tice occasionally miscarries, but it is rare indeed that prejudice so blinds the eyes of judge and jury as to lay them open to the charge of being members of a court "organized to convict."

Impartial papers - observing the course of this trial from the beginning -say that no Englishman would have been convicted on the testimony that sends Cunningham and Burton to prison for life. True, they may not have clearly established their innocence, but they certainly did make a much better showing in that direction than did the government in proving their will government in proving their guilt. Their burden and weight of proof rested with the government, yet all it could offer was circumstantial. Why Didn't They Talk German?

From the Pittsburgh Despatch.

On Saturday atternoon, as Frau Materna was on her way from the dressing room to the stage in the Fifth Avenue Market House, she passed the stand of a vender of hams, bologna sausages, &c., whose business was not at all interrupted by the matinee. One-minute stop at the station, and Chancing to look up, the Wagnerian prima donna saw some sausage and blood pudding hanging on hooks in the butcher's stand. She stopped, and a slow, progressive Wagnerian smile stole over her noble countenance. "Dem wuz nize puddins," she exclaimed.

"Dem's de pest puddings efer you ete," said the butcher man in an excited tone. "Vil you hef a pite?" Again that Wagnerian smile stole from its pasture, and the artist put forth her hand.

In a flutter of delight the butcher cut two or three inches of pudding on a brown-paper charger.

Materna ate it slowly and with great relish, wiped off her hand on the paper and, smiling for a third time, said to the butcher:

went out to charm the multitude, unconscious of having performed a feat which would have appalled an American athlete.
